they correctly anticipate that with the sheriff's custody in Lincoln Co. a broad guage road and direct oastern connections, the trade of New Mexico will not all go through Denver. That is the trouble.

They fondly expected to keep the world in ignorance of the real resources of New Mexico, to convey the ilea that it was a country so poor and worthless, that a railread could not afford to build into it; and by that means forever keep it tributary to Denver, over a single line of railroad.

But these dreams are now being dissipated; work has been commenced on the Atchison road south, and sooner or later it will extend southwest, through New Mexico opening up the most populous, most fertile and richest agricultural and mineral districts. By it, Denver will be brought in direct competition with Kansas City, St. Louis and Chicago for New Mexico trade, and therefore she hopes against hope that the road will not really be built. It may be rough on Denver, but then it is good for New Mexico. Our northern contemporaries will not take the proper course. poses to cross the Ratons also. All however. We give such news as we get, without any wish to take sides in a bitter community war, which we do not understand, and by which any party might be prejudiced before the courts.

A letter from Lincoln, dated Feb. 24th, states the difficulty arose out of the McSween case, who, on a hearing before Judge Bristol recently, was ordered to give $8,000 bail for his appearance at court, which he failed to give; and also that an attachment had been issued against his property. The sheriff attached all his property in Lincoln county and sent a deputy, with 4 or 5 men, to attach a herd of his cattle, on the Rio Feliz, who was resisted by armed men and returned. The posse of the deputy was increased and he went back and made the attachment, in obedience to law. McSween's men then tried to run off the horses, were pursued by the posse, on whom they fired. The posse returned the fire, killing Tunstall. In the meantime United The Denver papers, as a rule, States Marshal Wiederman, with a

The friends of Hon. Charles Mc-Cardless will be pleased to learn that the President has tendered him the Chief Justiceship of New Mexico. We presume he will accept the proffered honors with its corresponding responsibilities. This will take him from among us for four years at least. The fact that this appointment is a high compliment not only to Judge McCandless himself but to the community, makes it fitting that we should let the 'outer world' know who it is that the President has thus
